We have, upon the authority of universal rumors among those who know, announced that Bright, Fisch and Echles all voted in that way, and the rumor has never been denied by any one authorized to speak, or having any knowledge of the affair. We have quoted from the Courier its denunciatlons of the efforts of the Bell men for voting for Hendricks. We have published its announcement that hundreds of Breckinridge men either voted for Lane or refused to vote. The Southern Democratic Banner, published at Franklin, Kentucky, thus acknowledges the coalition, speaking of the defeat of Hendricks, it eays:

Just as we expected. Notwithstanding the odds against him, our Douglas friends had the audaoity to say, prior to the election, that the Little Giant would come off victorious, and thereby convince his opponents that he was the "Alpha and Omega" of true Democracy, that he was "all and in all." What were the odds against him unless it was that Breckinridge men intended to beat the ticket? Does not every one know that Indiana was a Democratio State, and that the "odds" were the Brackinrldge men, formerly Democrate, who voted against the regular nominees? The editor, however, not satisfied with this admission, exults over the auccess of the treasonable plot: We do not rejoice over the victory of the civilization and the institutions of the South. If Lineoln be elected in November, as seems highly probable, and none of the States of the South more to resist and withdraw from the domination of a hostile ecotional majority, our condition will be dangerous and humiliating in the extreme. Property of every description must fall, and insecurity and alarm extend from ilarper's Ferry to the borders of Texas. Nor can we perceive any overt act of aggression that would be potent enough to arouse the South from a speedy decline, to cetablish her safety and independance. At any rate, delay must require a compound and usurious interest of blood. An employee of the New York and Eric Road has recently invented an improvement in the arrangement of track chairs, which has been adopted by that road. Instead of spiking the chairs upon the ties, and resting the ends of the rails loosely in them, where they soon get loose enough to clatter and jar the wheels, and broom the ends of the rails, the chairs are placed between the ties, and fastened in their places by an effectual though simple arrangement of bolts and keys, so that there can be no possible variation in the level of the two ends of the rails, since both must rise and fall alike. The result is, that the cars appear to run upon a rail entirely smooth, making no jar whatever in passing off of one rail on to
